

Dear Ms Ursula Von Der Leyen,

I am Ilaria Rollo, a student at “Enrico Fermi” high school in Tuscany. In this letter I would like to talk about my “ideal school”.

First of all, it would be awesome if every school could have a library where students could take and read books of any genre. For example, in my middle school, when we had no lesson (because of the teacher’s absence for example), we could go to the library and take some books to read.

Another thing that I would like to add is concerned with extra-curricular courses, which include things that students have a passion for (like sport, debate, reading, drawing and so on), as to make them happier with the idea of going to school.

Regarding the environment, my school gave us hydro flasks to reduce the use of plastic. It would be great if every school could give their students a hydro flask and if every school could organise some recycling activities (like putting specific recycling bins in each classroom).

Lastly, in my opinion, there could be more projects about some of the typical problems of our time (such as bullying, eating disorders, mental health issues..) led by experts who really know how to deal with them.

I really hope that you will read this letter and, if possible, help us improve our learning experience.

Sincerely,

Ilaria Rollo
